Food Safety

All poultry products found in retail stores are inspected by the USDA for evidence of illness.

Turkeys and chickens are hormone and steroid free, only antibiotics are provided to the birds to prevent disease to ensure that consumers receive a healthy product. A withdrawal period is required therefore assuring that no residues are present in the bird's system at time of processing.
